IS THE DOG JIM OR JOE? TAKEN FROM DR. PHILLIPS BY DECORATOR BUDGES,

The Decorator, Who Was Arrested for Larceny, Says the Dog Is His, and Pro-duces Witnesses to Prove This-Other Witnesses Say It's Dr. Philips's, A nervous little dog, whose breed no one could name for a certainty, was the centre of interest at Harlem Court for three-quarters of an hour yesterday. He looked like a small greyhound, but his color was not gray. His value was placed

Dr. Harry Phillips of 201 Broome street said that the dog was his, and charged Charles Rudges, a decorator, of 1,970 Medison avenue, with taking him away from the front of his house. Rudges didn't deny that he took the dog, but declared that be was the owner.

IDr. Phillips said the dog, whom he called Jos, was given him about two years ago by Mrs. R. A. Lavine of 401 Grand street. Mrs. Lavine was in court with two other dogs, the mother and sister, she said, of Jos.

Mr. Rudges said that the dog was a present to him from an aunt in Boston. He got the present two years ago, and his aunt has the mother and

Dr. Phillips declared that in September last Joe was stolen from him, but the thief was caught and he got him back in Essex Market Police Court. Mr. Rudges's Jim was also stolen last September, and Mr. Rudges got him back in Harlem Court, where two thieves were sent to prison for stealing him. About a month ago Rudges lost his Jim again. He started out on a still hunt, and located him, he thought, in Dr. Phillips's house. He made a call on the Doctor, estensibly to get medical advice, and saw the dog in the Dector's parler. vice, and saw the dog in the Dector's parler.

Mr. Rudges says that he called Jim, and the affectionate beast fairly leaped at him.
He claimed the dog there and then, but Dr.
Phillips wouldn't give him up. One day last week Mr. Rudges happened to be near the Doctor's house, and saw Joe or Jim outside. He says that the dog followed him for a block and a hair, and wouldn't go back. He then put the dog in an express wagon and sent him to his home.
Dr. Phillips missed Joe and also stated and a half, and wouldn't go back. He then put the dog in an express wagon and sent him to his home.

Dr. Phillips missed Joe, and also started out on a still hunt. He thought of Mr. Rudges at once, and soon located the beast at his house. He complained at the East Eighty-eighth street police station, and Pollesman O'Connor arrested Mr. Rudges. The license number on the collar of the dog in Rudges's possession corresponded with that of a certificate issued by the S. P. C. A. in 1895 to Dr. Phillips.

When the case was tried yesterday, both parties were represented by counsel. The testimony of half a dozen persons, including the policeman who had arrested the thieves last September and neighbors who thought they knew the dog, was taken. Everybody identified him. Jim, or Joe, recognized everybody, too, even court hangers-on and reporters whom he had never seen before. When Dr. Phillips or Mrs. Lavine called Joe he would rush frantically out to the end of his chain toward them. When Mr. Rudges spoke the word Jim the genial brute would nearly go wild with delight.

Magistrate Simms was obviously perplexed. All the persons in the case, including the witnesses, were reliable people. The dog's testimory had to be stricken out because he contradicted himself several times.

The Magistrate finally decided that he could not entertain a charge of larceny, because there was evidently a mistake somewhers. He let Mr. Rudges go, and gave the dog to Mrs. Lavine to keep for Dr. Phillips, upon her promise that he should be accessible at any time if Mr. Rudges wanted to sue for him in a civil court. The dog seemed happy over the decision court.

Lutheran Services for the Holy Bead, Services in commemoration of the holy dead were held in St. James's Lutheran Church yesterday for the first time in an English-speaking church of that denomination. The Rev. Dr. J. B. Remensnyder, who preached the sermon said:

"All Sainta' Day" is one of the feasts retained by Luther. He chose the eve of that festival for nailing up his epoch-making thesis. The festival was retained by the Evangelical Unnon Death does not sever the bond of the saints. They should be close to us in memory."
Among those at the services were Mayor Schieran of Brooklyn and Charles L. Tiffany.

A Sacak Thief Rifles a Contribution Box A sneak thief entered the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, just after the close of the service, and with a pair of strong nippers cut off the padlock which fastened the top of the contribution box in the vestibule. He extracted all the contents except 50 cents. Every one had passed out of the church except the Rev. E. V. Collins, assistant rector, and two women with whom he was talking. James, the colored sexton, left the vestibule and entered the church to speak to Mr. Collins, and then the this got in his work. The loss is supposed to be between $25 and $60.

said is that these events have tended to prolong the indisposition of the public to speculate for a rise, and to induce it to await further develop even eighths, and barely make a living by it. A great European war, after the first shock given by it to credit had been met, would, judging by past experience, eventually stimu-late both our agricultural and our mechanical industries, and finally create speculation in our securities. The resources of Europe would be insufficient to meet the increased consumption of war material, and would have to be supplemented by those of this country. A certain amount, also, of foreign labor now engaged in producing commodities which compete with ours would be diverted to supplying the wants of armies, and thus, indirectly, an impetus would be given to our own manufactures. We should indeed be paid in part for our exports by the return of our stocks and bonds, but not enirely so, and gold would not only cease to flow from hence to Europe, but would come this way such a war, however, cannot be counted on with anything like certainty. The causes likely to provoke it are no more powerful now than they have been at any time during the last twenty-five years, and since, during all these years, they have been kept in check by skilful management, so they may be for years to come. Dismissing the expectation of benefit from this source, we should rather turn our attention to the more natural and healthful factors which operate in times of peace, and from which alone permanent good can proceed. Five years have elapsed since the Baring catastrophe shattered the fabric of credit in Great Britain, and it will very soon be three years since our collapse of 1893 began. By this time, it is reasonable to suppose, much of the mischief done in both countries has been repaired, and as London is showing itself ready for a renewed career of speculation, so a like display may eventually be expected here in New York. As a preliminary to any such improvement, the finances of our Government must first of all mprove. The national income for the month just ended has been insufficient to meet the national expenditures by $6,600,000, and for the current fiscal year, which began July 1, the deficiency is over $16,000,000. Congress will meet at the beginning of next month, and the first business then to come before it will be the adoption of some measure for producing more rev enue. Either an increase will be made of the tax on fermented liquors, or additional duties will be laid upon imported commodities. Should there be any great delay in passing an act of this kind, the necessities of the Treasury may compel another issue of bonds, and it is commonly believed that the Administration is resolved upon taking this step if Congress fails defeat it. Every Representative is, naturally, more solicitous for his standing in his own district than he is for the approval of the nation at large; and a measure which would commend with his self-interest for him to support it. A no legislation whatever. At all events, there will be nearly as fatal as defeat. descioncy in the revenue there is the objection that no law for such an issue exists. It is true that, by a subterfuge, which the necessities of the case have led the nation to sanction, bonds may be sold ostensibly for gold with which to redeem the old legal tender notes, and the notes thus redeemed may be paid out for general purposes, but this expedient has been resorted to already on three occasions, when the drain of gold from the Treasury afforded a pretext for employing it, and a repetition of it for a fourth time might not be so well received. Certainly, if there should be, as there is now, sufficient gold in the Treasury to redeem all the legal tenders presented, the attempt to sell bonds to provide for a contingency which did not exist, and was not likely to occur, would be sure to provoke criticism, if not condemnation. The probability is that our exports of cotton and other products during the next two or three months will supply enough foreign exchange to obviate the necessity of exporting gold from the country, and in the absence of gold exports nobody will draw gold from the Treasury. In that case the selling of bonds will be a flagrant usurpation of power. If, bowever, gold should be wanted for export, the selling of bonds to procure it otherwise than upon still more onerou terms than were made last February would b difficult, if not impossible. Much, therefore, depends upon the action of Congress, and what that action will be is, as I have explained, ex-

just been successfully accomplished in the case of the great Southern Railway system, and, on a smaller scale, in that of the New York and New England Railroad. The new Atchison, a few weeks, take possession of some thousands of miles of road, and give a good standing in the of the Northern Pacific, and one of the Philaproperties. Another step in advance will be the proposed railroad traffic agreement if it shall be adopted loyally by the great line which are expected to be parties to it, and so will be the permanent establishment of peace and harmonious action between the leading coal mining companies. After these will come, in turn, the reconstruction of the industrial enterprises which now encumber the Stock Exchange like wrecks upon the seashers after a storm. They contain plenty of good material for craft of more moderate dimensions but capable of dong much better service. What is true of then is true of a large number of individuals in busi ness who contrived to escape bankruptcy in 1893, but who are, as the news of the day shows, dropping off one by one, and giving way to sounder and more vigorous rivals. In a mercantile system like ours, where so much busi-ness is done on credit, it is essential that those who receive credit should deserve it, because the undeserving only obstruct the path of preceding and kept secret until the sudden re-vulsion of public feeling revealed it. As no single firm or corporation becomes bankrupt in-THE DEPRESSED STOCK MARKET. tantaneously, but goes through a more or less prolonged preliminary decay, so do those which fail in a group. The wind that sweeps over a forest can prostrate only the trees that are weak or decayed, and when a little more violent blast than usual effects more than usual damage, it still selects as its victims the objects least able from lack of soundness and vitality to resist it. The rest either hold up their heads against it, or, if they bow them, they resume their erect position as soon as its force is spent. Those which cannot do this must be cleared from off the face of the ground and replaced by healthier successors. This process is what we now see going on in the business and the financial world, and it cannot be completed all at once. That it will be completed sooner or later is as sure as that the coming winter will bring with it frost and anow, and be succeeded in time by spring. Precisely when winter will end and spring begin it is impossible to say, and so no sensible man will attempt to say precisely when the prevailing depressed stock market will give way, permanently, to one of a more cheerful character. CONKLIN'S BLACK HILLS RING. The Ex-Policeman's Reward for Braver

Two years ago Thomas A. Conklin, who was once a New York policeman, at the risk of his life carried a rope down a mining shaft in the Black Hills and rescued five miners who were in Black Hills and rescued five miners who were in danger of death. The miners and their friends gave him a gold ring containing a garnet stone watch is said to be the largest in the United States. The gem was encircled in gold fashioned into the form of a bunch of grapes.

While Conklin was showing the ring on Tuesday night in Flood Brothers' salcon, at Fortyseventh street and Second avenue. William Lewis, an ex-convict snatched it from his hand and dashed out of the salcon. He gave it to Lizzie Kelly of 336 East Fortieth street, who is said to be his sweetheast. Lewis was arrested on Saturday night as he was entering her house and the ring was taken from the girl. Lewis was half for trial when arraigned in the York-ville Court yesterday. The ring was returned to Conklin.

The New Utrecht Club Bisselved. been dissolved after an existence of five years. The debts have been liquidated and there is a surplus of $800 or more for distribution between the ninety-three members in good standing.
